THE MUSIC OF CHRISTOPHER ALEXANDER

About the Work

The poet's powerful words are fully encapsulated in this new choral anthem. The beginning declaration segues into a fast traveling waltz with a fervent and adventurous piano accompaniment. A slower, introspective section then returns to the fast waltz toward a final callback of the opening.

I am the song, that rests upon the cloud;

I am the sun;

I am the dawn, the day, the hiding shroud,

When dusk is done.

I am the changing colours of the tree;

The flower uncurled;

I am the melancholy of the sea;

I am the world.

The other souls that, passing in their place,

Each in their groove;

Out-stretching hands that chain me and embrace,

Speak and reprove.

O atom of that sun, by which the earth

Is turned and whirled;

Behold, ye hurrying with the crowd assert

You are the world.

Am I not one with all the things that be

Warm in the sun?

All that my ears can hear, or eyes can see,

Till all be done.

Of song and shine, of changing leaf apart,

Of bud uncurled:

With all the senses pulsing at my heart,

I am the world.

One day the song that drifts upon the wind,

I shall not bear;

Nor shall the rosy shoots to eyes grown blind

Again appear.

Deaf, in the dark, I shall arise and throw

From off my soul,

The numbered world with all its joy and woe,

That was my goal.

I shall arise, and like a shooting star

Slip from my place;

So lingering see the old world from afar

Revolve in space.

And know more things than all the wise may know

Till all be done;

Till One shall come who, breathing on the stars,

Blows out the light.

Dora Sigerson Shorter (1866-1918)
